

UNLOCK EUROPE'S MAJORITY

ECFR's project aims at pushing back against the rise of anti-Europeanism that threatens to weaken Europe and its influence in the world. Through polling and focus group data in 14 EU member states with representative sample sizes, ECFR's analysis will unlock the shifting coalitions in Europe that favour a more internationally engaged EU. This will show how different parties and movements can - rather than competing in the nationalist or populist debate - give the pro-European, internationally engaged majority in Europe a new voice.

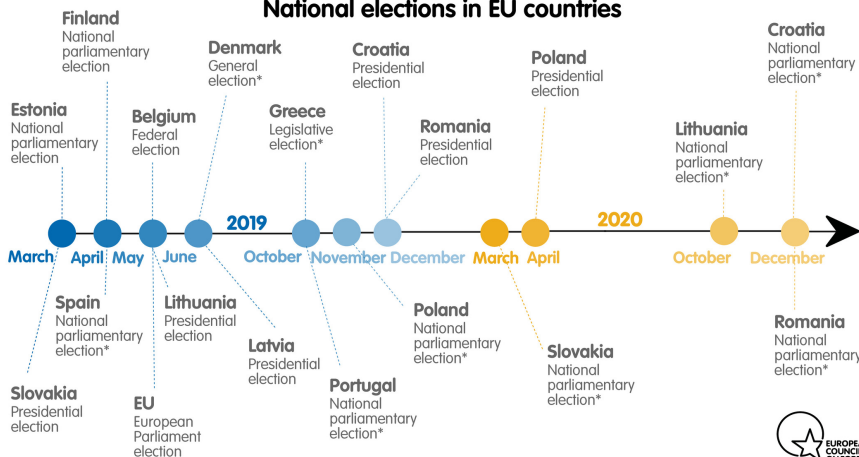

We will use this research to engage with pro-European parties, civil society allies, and media outlets on how to frame nationally relevant issues in a way that will reach across constituencies as well as the ears of voters who oppose an inward-looking, nationalist, and illiberal version of Europe.

EU27 MEPs' projected share of seats in the EP now and after the 2019 election

Among 29 seats for new parties in 2019, 50 per cent can be considered EU-sceptic or far-right.
* according to Poll of Polls projections, 3 January 2019

National elections in EU countries

*Deadline

WHAT DO EUROPEANS THINK?

Which party in the European Parliament elections would you vote for?

What is the single biggest threat for Europe today?

Are you more worried about people coming into your country or people leaving?

How confident are you that today's children will be better off than their parents?

Do you think a war between EU countries is a realistic possibility in the next 10 years?